A six-week pilot for one of your teams

People who sit all day know they should move more. What stops them is the moment itself: deciding what to do with five spare minutes. Lull makes that decision for them. Someone types how they feel, gets one short guided session, and it adjusts or stops as they go.

What your people get

- Sessions of 2½ to 4 minutes, guided step by step, in the browser. Nothing to install, no account.
- Mobility, stretching and low-impact movement that works at a desk.
- It adapts: "too easy" or "too much" changes the next movement.
- Pain, dizziness or injury stops the session and points to proper help.

What you get

- A team view: weekly active people, who is still using it, and when breaks happen. Totals only.
- A check-in at week 3 and a plain written report at week 6: what worked, what didn't, and whether to continue.
- Notes from short interviews with volunteers (anonymised).

How the six weeks run

Week 0
Pick one team of 10–50 people. 15-minute kick-off. Share a link.

Weeks 1–3
People use it whenever they want, as often as they like.

Week 3
Check-in on the team totals. Adjust anything that isn't working.

Weeks 4–6
Short interviews with up to 5 volunteers. Final report in week 6.

How we'll judge it

PROPOSED TARGETS, AGREED WITH YOU BEFORE WE START

Question	Measure	Target
Do people try it?	Share of the team who start at least one session in the first two weeks	At least half
Do they come back?	Of people who finish one session, how many use it again within a week	At least 1 in 3
Is it worth their time?	Answers to the optional "How did that feel?" question	More "Lighter" than "Not for me"
Is it safe?	Every report of pain or symptoms ends the session without offering more movement	Every time, no exceptions

If the targets aren't met, the week 6 report will say so plainly.

Privacy, in plain English

- You see totals, never a person: no names, no individual sessions, nothing anyone typed.
- Teams under 10 people are never shown.
- Who reported pain is never shared with anyone.
- People can switch off the activity log at any time.

What we need from you

- One team and one contact person.
- A 15-minute kick-off and a 30-minute check-in at week 3.
- Help finding up to 5 volunteers for 20-minute interviews.

Price

INDICATIVE

₹60–120 per person per month for the pilot, fixed in writing before it starts.

Before any paid pilot

Every movement and safety message will be reviewed by a physiotherapist. That review hasn't happened yet, and the pilot won't start until it has. Lull is English only for now, and it is not medical advice.

Next step: a 20-minute call to choose the team and agree the targets.

Request a pilot from the Lull page for teams.

Prototype-stage proposal. Prices and targets are planning assumptions until agreed in writing. Adapted from a starter harness provided for a take-home exercise.